Time running out to have your say on local funding for policing and community safety

Rupert Matthews, Leicester, Leicestershire and Rutland's Police and Crime Commissioner, is reminding local residents to give their views on the funding they pay towards policing and community safety.

The Commissioner recently unveiled his Police and Crime Plan 2024-29 which focusses on the key concerns of residents across the force area. Now he is working to set a budget that will provide the Chief Constable with the appropriate resources to deliver on priority areas including neighbourhood policing, crime prevention and services for victims of crime.

As part of that process, he is asking people for their views on the amount of council tax they pay towards policing, victim support, crime prevention and community safety, known as the 'Policing Precept'. This survey will close on the 21st January 2025 and the Commissioner is keen to hear from residents from across the city and two counties.
